THE LAND QUESTION

General Hartwell Gives His Views.VALUE OF SMALL
PROPRIETORSHIPSHowever Newlands Amendment
Cannot and Will Not Achieve its Avowed Object.

Editor Advertiser: No one can feel more strongly than I do the benefit which a country derives from a large number of small landholders. They are likely to be conservative in political matters. The strength of France has repeatedly been shown to be in its smaller rather than in its large proprietors. The weakness of England is thought by many to be in its small number of great landed proprietors. And so the ostensible and avowed object of the Newlands amendment to the Organic Act of the Territory of Hawaii, limiting to 1,000 acres the holdings of joint stock companies, meets my hearty approval. I was born and bred among just such people, the independent New England farmers, as I would like to see more of in Hawaii.

But the difficulty with the Newlands amendment is that it will not and cannot accomplish its avowed object. It is so worded, to begin with, as to leave in the minds of some persons a doubt whether the words "acquire and hold real estate" mean, as they popularly do, possessing land, by whatever tenure, and regardless of the technical meaning which refers to the quality of the estate, and not to the land itself. A like doubt may possibly exist as to whether the law means to exclude existing corporations which have as much as 1,000 acres from acquiring any more, or refers only to new corporations. Again, old charters granted under the law, as it stood before the Act authorizing associations to be formed by articles of association, usually contained no reserved power in the Government to alter or amend the charter, and in such cases no limit can probably be placed on the unlimited power of acquiring land which such charters gave. This places some corporations greatly and unfairly at an advantage over others.

Furthermore, most of the agricultural corporations already have more than the limit. Why should they and not new corporations have like advantage?

Then there is the fact that large areas of land in Hawaii, in certain localities, cannot be used for any purpose in small lots. The need of expensive machinery for obtaining water for irrigation explains this fact.

The ease with which the law can be practically evaded shows its futility. What advantage to small landholders is there in several 1,000-acre corporations over one of large holdings?

The hope which I entertain is that large corporations will see their way, after a time, to allotting small pieces of land to settlers and cultivators.

The distribution of shares of corporations among a large number of people is an indirect way of securing a permanent interest in the great agricultural enterprises of Hawaii, and as it is evident that small plantations cannot be made to pay, the more that people of moderate means own in paying, sound, not over-capitalized concerns, the better.
